Caisa Tigerberg and the Philosopher's Stone

Chapter 1: Platform Nine and Three-Quarters

They wheeled their trolley down the platform and found a compartment in the middle of the train. Crabbe and Goyle helped them heave their trunks into the compartment that they found in the middle of the train then Crabbe and Goyle walked out.

Caisa and Draco spent the next few hours getting to know each other. They talked about everything from Hogwarts to Caisa being Draco's cousin and that they had both male genitalia and wondered from which side Caisa could have gotten it. It was about twelve when a smiling dimpled woman asked them if they wanted anything from the trolley.

Caisa stepped up and walked out into the corridor with her cousin behind her.

There were Bertie Botts Every-Flavour Beans, Droobles Best Blowing Gum, Chocolate Frogs, Liquorice Wands and a number of other strange things.

"What should I get Draco?" Caisa asked her cousin.

"How about a bit of everything?" Draco asked grinning.

"Maybe not the Liquorice Wands though?" Caisa said.

"Yeah, I'm not really fond of liquorice either." Draco said.

Caisa bought everything except the wands.

"What are these?" Caisa asked holding up a package of Chocolate Frogs.

"They're not real frogs are they?"

"No, its nice though you get a card inside with a famous witch or wizard." Draco said.

Caisa ate her chocolate frog and looked at her card.

"So this is Dumbledore." she said sneering.

"He's not as great as everyone thinks. Father says he is the worst to that have happened to Hogwarts." Draco said.

"I agree." Caisa said.

They ate in silence as they watched the fields fly by.

When they had eaten up their candy they took out their coursebooks and read until it was fifteen minutes left then they changed and when the train had stopped they walked out of the train.
